MOSES THE HERETIC

BY

DANIEL SPIRO

Praise for Daniel Spiro's novel, The Creed Room

"A terrific read. How wonderful to plunge into a book where ideas reign – delectable, relevant, accessible ideas about faith, justice secularism, fairness, religion, politics and the nature of reality. America's response to Sophie's World."

Irvin Yalom, author of When Nietzsche Wept and The Schopenhauer Cure

"The Creed Room presents a clever 'what if' in the spirit of George Bernard Shaw."

Douglas Rushkoff, author of Nothing Sacred: The Truth about Judaism

"... a worthy model for the type of dialogue so urgently needed in the United States."

Sankara Saranam, author of God Without Religion

Aegis Press would like to announce a remarkable novel, MOSES THE HERETIC, by Daniel Spiro. The author uses the vehicle of fiction to confront the reader about a range of topics in contemporary religion and politics – including the Arab-Israeli conflict, immortality, and God. MOSES THE HERETIC examines the hero of the Exodus and asks the question, “If he were alive today, what would Moses do?” The author’s answer is given in the form of the unforgettable character, Rabbi Moses Levine. Levine is obsessed with following in the footsteps of his namesake, but he is far from the mouthpiece of the traditional God. Fueled by heretical ideas, but with a nearly infinite passion to repair our world, Levine can be as infuriating as he is inspiring.

MOSES THE HERETIC tells a story about prophecy in a way that is authentically Jewish. This prophet is no saint – he is stripped bare in all his humanity – but he is also steeped in the highest values of Judaism, which includes the respect for other cultures and faiths. As a result, MOSES THE HERETIC not only reveals much about the essence of the Jewish faith, but also presents its sister religions in a light that is sure to repel the chauvinist and delight the ecumenical soul.
